When you know a storm is coming, act fast!

Most hailstorms happen during the late afternoon or early evening, after the day's heated up and the storm's had a chance to brew.

Environment Canada posts hail and windstorm warnings, so if you see a notification – or sense that a storm is coming – do what you can to prepare yourself and your home. Here are a few tips:

1. Bring bikes, toys, sports equipment, potted plants, and any other loose items from your yard or deck – anything that you don't want to have blown away or smashed into the side of your home – inside your house or garage.
2. Move vehicles into a garage or under a carport to shield them from both wind and hail damage. If you don't have that option, you can protect your vehicle with a portable car cover or a hail blanket. You can also use common household items, such as tarps, rugs, heavy blankets, flattened cardboard boxes, patio furniture cushions, or even your vehicle's floor mats. Consider securing the items with bungee cords, ropes, or tie-down straps so they don't blow off.
3. If you have valuable items that you can't move inside, cover them with tarps. A tarp may not prevent damage from big hailstones but could deflect smaller ice pebbles.
4. Bring in or secure your trash and recycling bins and outdoor furniture, and close patio umbrellas.
5. Secure trampolines with anchors and sandbags. Trampolines are basically tarps on metal legs, often with a netting around them – perfect for a strong wind to lift and send sailing down a street, soaring onto a roof, or crashing into your siding or windows.
6. Close all your windows and doors to keep hail out of the house. If you have shutters, close them for the duration of the storm to protect your window glass. Closing your curtains can also protect the inside of your home if a hailstone breaks a window.
